Long before the outbreak of the great est civil struggle ever known to history the sectional feeling between the north and south was so intense that only the northern homes; when the smouldering flames did break out the civilized world stood aghast at their furious raging; years after the conflict had been decided, that feeling of bitterness actuated political campaigns and prompted diabolical crimes in the name of patriotism. ## AN ELECTRIC THEORY

DP. GROSS EXPLAINS THE USE OF HIS MACHINE.

He Wishes to Capture and Utilize the Electrical Fluid-His Object Is to Get a Centrifugal Force Exceeding That of the Earth He Uses Kites.

Dr. William M. Gross of Gillespie, Ills., believes that his electrical machine, which has been tested at the Laclede Gas, Light and Power company's plant at the foot of Mound street, will revolutionize the methods of producing electric power.

Primarily Dr. Gross is at war with the schools. The scholastic idea is that electricity is a static force. Dr. Gross holds that it is induced. He advances arguments in behalf of his theory that electricians laugh at, but do not refute.

Some of the tests made by Dr. Gross and his associates by means of kites have been successful in a small degree. Others will follow, and it is expected that by March 1 it will be known whether the Gillespie doctor or the practical electricians are right. Dr. Gross is manifestly of thoughtful habit, almost 50 years old, bald, gray bearded and strong of frame. He is the leading practitioner in the Gillespie neighborhood and has a local reputation as a mathematician. No man in the community stands higher.

His backers in his electrical invention are John H. Eilers of Gillespie and Frank Friede and William Brandt of Mount Olive, Ills. They are men of means, amply able to stand the expense of the experiments. Their indersement of his theory tells better than words of the faith that is reposed in him. Still there is a division of sentiment in Gillespie, many of Dr. Gross' neighbors be lieving, with the electricians, that his idea is chimerical.

Dr. Gross recently discussed his theo ry. He said:

'My purpose is to capture and utilize the earth seeking electricity. I am in opposition to the schools in believing that electrical force is induced and not static. I do not pretend to be an electrician. Time will tell whether I am a scientist.

"The earth and its atmosphere are the armature, and that portion of space between the earth and the sun is the electro magnet of nature's grand dynamo electric machine. The sun is shining on one-half of the earth all the time. Its rays are vertical on some portion of the earth all the time. The space between the earth and the sun is heavily charged with electricity. Currents of this electricity are induced out of space by the revolutions of the earth from west to east.

"In accordance with the rule of electric currents they pass in opposite directions, going from east to west. This is in obedience to the law, interpreted by Lenz more than 60 years ago, that induced currents of electricity always go in opposite directions to the electric magnetic force producing the current. These currents are brought down to and through the earth's centrifugal force. This force tends from the center toward the east. The current tends from the east and to the center of the earth. When the center becomes surcharged, the current flows off at about the seventieth parallel, producing the north and south winds.

"I will say nothing about the construction of my machine, but my object is to get a centrifugal force exceeding that is in space.

"That is the kernel of my idea. "The earth travels 1316 miles a minute. My machine must go faster than this in order to induce the electricity I

"I am not quite satisfied with the re-sults attained. We got a decided ourrent, but curiously enough the strongest flow was from an altitude of only 100 feet. The men handling the kites then had to put on rubber gloves.

"I got my idea in 1895. It came from the discovery that the earth was full of electricity, resulting from experiments with the ground wire of a telephone. I lay down and thought earnestly of how I could capture the earth's electricity. It came to me like a flash if I could overcome the earth's centrifugal force I could utilize the electricity it induces. That is what my machine is intended to do. Whether it will do it or not remains to be seen."-St. Louis Post-Dis-
